The prison system is widely believed to be an immutable element of contemporary society. Many criminologists and sociologists of deviance believe that decarceration movements have failed to yield progressive reform and that feasible alternatives to the prison system do not exist. Maeve McMahon challenges these views by reconstructing the emergence of critical perspectives on decarceration. She examines analytical and empirical problems in the research and also points out how indicators of community programs and other penalties serving as alternatives to prison have typically been overshadowed through critical focus on their effects in widening the net of control. McMahon presents a detailed analysis of decreasing imprisonment and of the part played by alternatives in this during the postwar period in Ontario. Drawing from extensive documentary research and from interviews with former correctional officials, she charts the changing climates of opinions and socio-economic factors which facilitated decarceration by situating her analysis in the context of theoretical and political arguments about the possibility of decarceration. McMahon provides in her work a stimulus to the development of progressive penal politics not just in Canada but in all Western countries.

Robson Crim is housed in Robson Hall, one of Canada's oldest law schools. Robson Crim has transformed into a Canada-wide research hub in criminal law, with blog contributions from coast to coast and from outside of this nation's borders. With over 30 academic peer collaborators at Canada's top law schools, Robson Crim is bringing leading criminal law research and writing to the reader. We also annually publish a special edition criminal law volume of the Manitoba Law Journal, providing a chance for authors to enter the peer-reviewed fray. The journal has ranked in the top 0.1 percent on Academia.edu and is widely used. Silver, and Leon Laidlaw.

First published in 2000, in this title the author argues that drug users end up in gaol for many reasons, but in the most general terms they divide the drug-using part of a prison population along three lines: those incarcerated because of their use or possession of drugs with intent to supply; those gaoled for offences other than drug use but who happen to be involved in drug use; and those who acquired their drug habit whilst in gaol. They argue that whilst prisons offer the opportunity to influence drug habits in a positive way, it can also produce exactly the opposite effect.
